And as I cooled his heated brow, He thought of friendships dear— Of country, home, and wife, and heaven, And wished his children near. I've gone within the captive's cell, And eased his aching heart;

Have cheered the care-worn weary one Along the public mart, Within the chambers of the sick, I've fanned the fevered frame, and heard a voice, like seraph's song, Adore the Say our's name. The fainting heart I've oft inspired, Amilst the gath'ring gloom, And strewed with love and sweetest flowers The pathway to the tomb; Have dried the tear of sighing ones, And bade them weep no more, While blissful smiles of loved ones gone Beamed from the other shore. Received my message dear, and smiled in eestasy to know The blessed Saviour near. But time would fail me here to tell Of countless mercies given; The roll of ceaseless years must speak-They're registered in heaven.
